SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

One Year, $1.50; Six Months, 75c; boro, Ga., under the Act of Congress March 3, 1879.

SHOULD KEEP A FEW BEES

The sweet young city girl who visiting country relatives, was interested to note, from the presence of honey and butter on the table, that her relatives kept a bee and a cow, was using her head to think with. It is even more practical to keep bees than cows, for the bee will feed himself and store up for his keeper without outside help, while the cow must be looked after with greatest vigilance if she is to be made profitable.

In the present state campaign, considerable sport has been at the expense of Commissioner Brown. The cause of the fact that he has given a job to one of his sons to look after the bees in Georgia. It may be that there ought to be somebody else on the job, but it is an important one.

People generally are overlooking something worth while when they do not put in one or more "stands" of bees. It is not hard to secure a colony of bees and a little careful study, reading a few books devoted to bee culture, will quickly enable any one to properly handle and care for them.

Few sweets that go on the dining table are more enjoyable than honey.

Even if you had but enough bees to produce honey for your own table it would be a good investment. But there is always a good market for this product. You can better understand this when you learn that last year almost $50,000,000 worth of honey was sold in this country and exported to other countries. Men who make bee culture a business have made comfortable fortunes at it. It requires but a small expenditure to get started, and each season finds new colony of busy little workers, ready to occupy another "stand" alongside their birthplace, ready to devote their lives to gathering nectar, fanning it free of the moisture it contains and packing it—all ready for market—in plain glass jars ready to get to when the honey harvest arrives.

It is hard to get credit where credit is due, but the man who wants to try something that is hard should try to get credit where hills are due.

When you see a man kicking a stray dog you can bet he is the kind of fellow whose wife and children hate to see him come home at night.

GOING FISHING

Along about this season of the year the average man begins to feel the effects of the warm weather. He rolls out of bed minus a good deal of the "pep" he feels when he gets up from a good night's rest in the fall and winter months, and by the time the sun climbs to the center of the sky and sheds its warm rays straight down he feels the temptation to yawn, to lessen his speed in working and walking—the sort of wishes he had a good excuse to go fishing.

Man, you don't need any excuse—just pick up and go. The fact that you are some day going to get where you won't be able to fish is excuse enough for going a little of it now.

President Coolidge once said he couldn't see anything to it, and yet since he caught a fish a few weeks

WEARING COTTON GOODS

There probably never will be a time when it will be a problem what to do with the corn crop, wheat crop or our beef cattle, for there will never be a time when people can quit eating, and these things form the foundation of almost every meal. But we have reached the point where the cotton grower can do a little worrying about his future cotton crops, for it looks as though the race, inasmuch as the fair sex is concerned, is going to be able to get on with very few clothes. Already cotton stockings are becoming scarce, and more and more women and girls are going in for dresses and underwear made of other material than cotton. We are not intimating that we have made anything more than a casual, long-distance inspection of the apparel worn by the fair sex. Please don't get us wrong there. But we do see enough, and so does everybody else, to lead us to the belief that if styles change as fast in the next five years as they have in the past five, and the demand for silk and sheer-silk continues as great, the cotton plant is in for a big problem. And yet, who knows but out of it all he will be forced to grow some other crop that will bring him more money?

TIMES EDITOR INVITED

TO BAKE LADY'S CAKE

A country editor must of necessity be a versatile personage. He must know how to intelligently answer questions on many matters—he must be posted on affairs of state and of matrimony. He is supposed to know all about statecraft from having read in the papers and from having pondered in his leisure moments.

He is supposed to be taught in matters of home management and domes-ticity by the head of his home—even as other men are taught.

What an editor doesn't know, he must pretend to know. He must look wise and advise the people how to farm; how to run their banks; how to run the church and state, and how to run the home. In giving advice he must be careful to leave a loophole from which to escape when his advice goes wrong, and he should be particularly careful that he does not crowd his answers to questions put to him on varying subjects. It has been told of an editor that his advice was asked on two subjects one day recently: A farmer wanted to know how to rid his field of grasshoppers, and a young mother wanted to know how to care for her teething twins. The editor wrote perfectly intelligent and practical answers, but he crossed them in the mails. To the farmer pestered with grasshoppers he answered: "Give the little things castor oil and rub their gums gently." To the mother with twins he wrote: "Scatter grasshopper on the little pests and burn them."

Advice is an easy thing to give, but when it comes to application, that is altogether another matter. The editor of this enterprising journal is always careful in giving advice, guarding so that he may not entrap himself by any misadventure and so that little harm can come through any poor advice.

Most of all, he guards against any attempt at a practical demonstration of his wisdom. If he tells how, he never undertakes to show how.

And this last statement is made in order to justify ourselves in the eyes of our lady friends who called up this office Saturday morning and sweetly wanted to know if we would bake her cake for Sunday. Hers was a sweet cake, just like an angel cake, and she urged that she was counting on us and that we must not disappoint her. As firmly and with as sweetly as possible we replied: "Madam, we do not bake cakes here on Saturdays or any other day in the week. We eat cake on Sundays and on week days when we have company, but possively we never have baked cakes for ourselves or anybody else." And then we suggested that the lady take the cake shop, and suggested that she send the editor a slice of the cake if she got it baked. She said she had thought she was talking to the bakery all the time. We didn't have cake for Sunday either, so we suspect she was too late there also.

We are always ready to advise, but we are not so strong on performance.

DON'T MAKE A CAMEL

OF YOUR MILK COW

Dont try to make a camel out of your milk cow, the Larrow Institute of Animal Economics warns the dairyman. A camel can go for days without water and does not even have to eat regularly to do a day's work.

But a camel is not required to produce from 25 to 50 pounds of milk per day as a cow.

"To continue to yield milk in the quantities asked of her, a cow needs a full and regular ration of nourishing food every day in the year," the Institute states. "She cannot get it from August pasture without a supplementary ration of grain. You cannot make a camel out of a cow, nor should you ask a cow to graze all day on land that is nearly as barren as the desert.

Observations by Professor Wilbur

J. Fraser, of the University of Illinois, have shown that in four weeks over a period from May to November, there was a total of only 3 weeks which an acre and a half of pasture land was sufficient to support one cow, the Institute declares. And in two of those periods there were 2 weeks when 30 acres of pasture land were required to yield feed enough for one cow. "It is impossible for any cow to graze over this amount of land even if the ground were available. To cover 30 acres a day, and even granting that she had a 24-inch muzzle, that cow would have to walk 18 miles a day cropping the grass like a lawnmower.

Where pastures are affected by the dry weather, the dairyman who wants his cows in condition for the biggest production next fall and winter will find that the herd is kept on a grain ration sufficient to keep up milk production."
